It’s the beginning of the summer.

In a village in the north of Turkey, Lale and her four sisters come home from school, innocently playing with boys. The supposed debauchery of their games causes a scandal with unintended consequences. The family home slowly turns into a prison, classes on housework and cooking replace school, and marriages begin to be arranged. The five sisters, driven by the same desire for freedom, fight back against the limits imposed on them.
A people pleaser, Mizrap, labeled a “good fellow”, is a disappointment to his family as a 40-year-old with no job, no goals and no ambitions whatsoever...

He is thrown out of the house just as he decides to visit his old army friend, Salim, who lives in a small village. The village, as Salim describes it, is a “piece of heaven with endless fields to cultivate, where a man can naturally dream of a small house, a wife and children…”

So Mizrap begins a long journey with his dog Karakız, which turns out to be an enlightening adventure: sometimes fun, sometimes painful, but eventually part of “life” itself.

A Good Fellow is his second feature.

Arabesque Underground tells the story of the youth in the former slums and new suburbs of Istanbul. Rapping, dancing, rolling around and hanging cool, but soon swearing, fighting and protesting, these boys and girls are at pains to prove themselves to the world; and they write their stories on the wired walls of this new world.

The boys of the hood have finally fixed the studio of their dreams. They are gearing up for a talent contest and working on an arabesque rap dedicated to the brother who will soon be released from the jail. The brother is released, but is stuck on a romance he has kept alive in his imagination. It then turns out that, although thought to have been innocent, he did actually smuggle drugs for that very same lover. Desperate to escape the tragedies of the underground, the kids of the hood try to hang on to their dreams through dance and music. But the ruthless, prospering city of Istanbul will reduce their fantasies to ashes.

Arabesque Underground is her debut feature.

The story is about eight people, whose lives depend on an illegal operation in an abandoned sanatorium.

They are:
A woman, who has lost her husband to war, escapes from her country and is forced to sell her kidney to provide for her child’s future (the Immigrant);
A man who no longer has anyone but his daughter (the Rich);
A Pimp who wants to earn more money (the Ugly);
A Health Care Team seeking to streamline their lives illegally (the Doctor, the Nurse and the Technician);
A Father who has found a kidney illegally for his only son to survive (the Customer);
And a man who has lived at the sanatorium for 25 years (the Homeless).

At the end of a tense operation, the immigrant’s kidney is delivered to the customer and everyone assumes that everything is proceeding smoothly. This is, however, far from truth, for the Rich has totally different plans for everyone ...
Ending up in hospital after a traumatic night, young Deniz has to confront the ghosts of her past. Her father, Ayhan, a well-known actor, has been obsessed with Deniz’s sexuality since she was a child and is pushing her unconsciously into a life of parties, men and sex. But the lifestyle merely traps her in her childhood traumas. Helped by a psychiatrist, she slowly recovers and learns to accept the scars on her body and soul. Deniz’s search for love and acceptance eventually leads her to a place where she gets to unlock her father’s drawers and discover the reason behind his obsessions. Her father, Ayhan, was hiding his “virility” stuffed in drawers away from everyone but himself. Her salvation comes ultimately through helping others to succeed and achieve her own dream.

Mehmet Binay studied political science in Darmstadt and worked as a diplomatic correspondent for NTV Turkey from 1997 to 2003. Since founding Cam Films, he has directed documentaries such as Whispering Memories and Talking Pictures.

M. Caner Alper studied industrial engineering, but his passion was always literature and cinema. His first book, “Today is Cleaning Day!”, is a collection of humorous stories. The freight ship, Sarmasik, is to sail to a loading port in Egypt before continuing with her cargo to Angola. As she heads south from Istanbul, the ship’s owner goes bankrupt, leaving the crew unpaid for months. Only when they reach the Egyptian port, do the captain and crew discover that there is a lien on the ship; this effectively means they can neither call at the port, nor go ashore. The ship is ordered to the anchorage area by the port authority and a skeleton crew of six required to stay on board in case the ship has to be moved. Once named, the six have their passports seized and begin an indefinite wait on Egyptian shores.

They all have different stories, different backgrounds and different reasons for getting away from Istanbul. Divisions appear between them early on. Petty conflicts quickly escalate into bigger fights when the food and water run out on board, and the ship turns into a battlefield where men hunt men.

Tolga Karaçelik studied film in New York after earning a law degree in Turkey. The aftermath of the 1980 military coup... Muzaffer and his pregnant wife, Melek, are revolutionaries. They live with Muzaffer's father, Celal, who was kicked out of the army. Before long, Muzaffer is arrested and killed under torture. Because of the torture she, too, undergoes, Melek gives birth to a handicapped child. When she returns to her father-in-law's house, he blames her for everything they have been through and refuses to let her have her older son Deniz. He then throws Melek out of the house.

30 years have passed. Despite all the pressure from his grandfather to become a soldier or a policeman, Deniz makes it only as a security guard. After losing his job, he decides to go back to the mother and brother he hasn't seen for years...
Salih Ekrem is a young air officer and one of the first Ottoman pilots. He lost his wife during the birth of their daughter, Gülmelek. In February 1915, when the British fleet begins its offensive in Gallipoli, Salih Ekrem leaves Gülmelek in his mother’s care in Istanbul and sets off for Gallipoli, flying on one of the first aircrafts of the time. On an air reconnaissance mission one day, Salih rushes to the aid of a group of Turkish medical personnel, among them the young nurse Nihal, when two British planes attack them. Although badly injured during the skirmish, he manages to save a young boy named Fuat with the help of Nurse Nihal. Fuat, an orphan, is taken under the wing of Nurse Nihal, Captain Dr. Ragıp, Nurse Erika and Hakkı, captain of the minelayer, Nusret. Seeing their own real or would-be children reflected in the “young vet” Fuat, everyone does their best to protect him.

During the most violent and terrifying days of the war, Fuat is the force that draws Captain Salih and Nihal closer. When Nihal is required by her duties to return to Istanbul, their closeness blossoms into a great romance expressed in letters.

The film opens with the theme of separation and hope in front of a house that stands among other dilapidated and abandoned houses in a typical Anatolian village. As another family leaves the village, the old father and mourning mother behold the scene far away. Unaware of the goings-on, Soner, their son who has Down’s syndrome, enjoys the trip. Mehmet Ali, who struggles to get a foothold in the city, symbolizes everything that the city lacks for the poor with his gimpy leg. The family moves into an apartment, which is to be demolished in six months as part of an urban transformation project. This and the razed houses encircling their apartment foreshadow the devastation that is to come and shape the atmosphere of the film. The story of their encounter with the city and their ultimate return bring together the fates of father and son.

If feelings are suppressed, a person’s relationship with existence will be limited to journeys made into secret lives.” The need to hide truths, the secret niches one creates in life and the resulting pressure felt from the moments of suppression... Exactly like the relationship established by lies. By examining such human behaviour, Secret sets out to describe the age and society we live in, to document and reflect on the facts without being judgemental, and ultimately to understand human beings.

Orhan and Ali live at the foot of a mountain far from human habitation. The two brothers make a living from producing charcoal. When Bahar joins the household as Ali’s bride, the rhythm of their life is suddenly disrupted.

The problem is that Bahar’s ways and ideas conflict with the age-old customs and traditions of village people, and this ultimately puts an end to a story that has continued for generations.

Ali, a young teacher, lives with his mother, Nighar, in the Tarlabaşı district of Istanbul until an urban regeneration project uproots them from their home. After being forced to evacuate their village in Eastern Turkey in the 1990s, they now find their lives interrupted once again. Problems start when they move out to a remote new construction area surrounded by tall buildings. Convinced that all her old neighbours have returned to the village, Nighar packs up her belongings every morning ready to move back too. Some days she gets lost in the city. Ali tries different ways of keeping her company: he takes her with him wherever he goes on his motorbike, buys her little chicks to look after and keep her busy, and tries to hunt down a cassette with the song she has been dreaming about. At the same time, Ali discovers that his girlfriend, Zeynep, is pregnant, but he doesn’t feel ready to become a father. He is torn between the two women.

Space Force 2911 is the first 3D animated feature to be made in Turkey. The film recounts the adventures of the Turkish space ship, TCG Savarona, and its crew during a mission in the year 2911.

The TCG Savarona crew is made up of fearless and highly talented scientists under the command of Captain Murat. And its mission is to collect gas and particle samples from a dangerous and previously uncharted nebula known as the ninth sector of space. Leaving the space station Albatros behind, the spaceship sets off on what is expected to be a straightforward trip. However, fate and circumstances soon lead them into the thick of a war where they will have to fight for life or death. Not only do the lives of millions on Earth depend on the outcome of the war, the very existence of humankind and the solar system is at stake! Captain Murat and his crew have a weighty task on their hands...

Şahin Michael Derun (1967) is an Australian film director, visual effects artist, film producer and screenwriter. After graduating from the Australian Film, Television and Radio School (AFTRS), he started working for the commercial production division of Network Ten Australia as a visual effects supervisor. Here he won Australasian Television Awards for Best Animated Commercial in 1996 and 1997. Since then he has been involved as a freelance visual effects artist in the production of many award-winning film and television projects, such as The Matrix, Star Trek Voyager and Spiderman 2. Space Force 2911 is his directorial debut.
Spirit of Dust is the first full-length feature from Nesimi Yetik, a new-generation director who won a wide fan base with his cult short, My Mother Learns Cinema. The film entices us into the circumscribed world of male cleaner Metin, a devotee of Arabesque music who also writes songs. But Metin’s steady life takes a turn when two people step unexpectedly into his life: firstly his nephew, Ümit, who arrives in Istanbul to do his military service, and then Neslihan, a woman who also works for one of his clients. Later in the story, however, both Ümit and Neslihan go their own ways. As for Metin, the man with a quiet, happy life is occupied with changing his fate. It is Tansu Biçer, with his extraordinary performance in the lead, who brings the film alive as we delve into the world of men and examine given gender roles. Progressing from dim and dusty apartments to the colorful world of television talent shows, Spirit of Dust sustains audience interest by fostering a sense of empathy and curiosity. Does Metin, a contender for the title of most colorfully dressed character in Turkish cinema, have it in him to change his passive state in life? With its metaphysical finale, the film leaves the door open to many different interpretations.

Faruk Hacıhafızoğlu (Kars, 1965) earned a BSc degree in Agricultural Engineering from Akdeniz University and a BA degree in Contemporary Media Practices from Westminster University, London. He has worked as a journalist, photographer, producer and director. Snow Pirates is his debut feature.

1981... Turkey is on the brink of one of the most brutal coup d’état in its history, but also facing one of the harshest winters of recent years... In Kars, a city with a rich historical heritage in the farthest northeast corner, people’s need for coal is as acute as their need for freedom. That winter, coal is as valuable as jewelry, like a diamond that can’t be bought with money, but remains accessible to a mere handful of state institutions and privileged individuals. It is as if the coup d’état is punishing the city with cold. Serhat, Gürbüz and İbo have no more to their name than their dreams and toboggans. But they are about to embark on a journey in search of coal, the jet-black jewel that contrasts so sharply with the whiteness of snow. And the journey will teach them the power of solidarity. It is this pursuit of coal, rather than play, which marks the three kids’ school vacation after they receive their mid-year reports. Sources are limited and they start by searching for odd remnants of half-burned coal to toss in their stoves at home. But the heroes will soon rely on their wit and mettle to find new sources. An innocent struggle, which began as a means to heating their homes under the shadow of the coup d’état, will become a landmark introducing the three to the realities and responsibilities of life.
In spite of his circumstances Ahmet is brutal in the way he treats Ayşe, snapping at, and looking down on her all the time. Every now and then Ayşe looks as if she can bear it no longer, but she has little choice but to bottle everything up inside. One day, when she is consumed with unhappiness and despair, the doorbell rings and she finds Ali on the doorstep.

Although Ali’s real reason for moving to Istanbul was to study, he soon found himself part of a political group through his new friends. This ended up in him spending a while behind bars, which meant he couldn’t even go to his own mother’s funeral. Ali’s quiet, withdrawn nature made his spell in prison very tough; he was tortured so badly that it left him sexually dysfunctional. He then decided to return to his hometown as soon as he was released.

Avni Kütükoğlu (İstanbul, 1957) started working in theater in 1968. At around the same time he was introduced to the film industry where he took up a number of small jobs. He wrote the screenplay of most of the films he has directed.

To Kill a Don Juan is a detective story about the murder of an idealistic psychiatrist. Prompted by chagrin over the suicide of one of his patients, the psychiatrist decided to research mentally ill women firsthand by dating them through the Internet. The murder case is solved by a down-to-earth, humorous detective who has to use his common sense as a tool of psychological interrogation.

Sabahattin Sakman (Zonguldak, 1949) has worked mainly as an information technology manager, a university lecturer in software development and a consultant in both Turkey and the United States. He has written articles on politics and culture that have been published in newspapers and magazines, hosted a TV Show, and presented daily news commentary for a TV channel. To Kill A Don Juan marks Sakman’s debut feature as a director.

Soviet Russia in the 1940s. The Eastern front in World War II is ablaze.

The battle between the USSR and Germany is spreading to North Caucasia, leaving a trail of people suffering in its path. Among them is Cennet. When her husband, Niyaz, is captured, the newly married Cennet is left all alone with her baby. As if this was not enough, the Nazi invasion means she finds herself in prisoner camps in Germany. Her adventure, which includes labor camps, evacuation, escape and death, comes to an end in the middle of nowhere in Asia. Cennet waits 50 years for her husband, with endless love and little hope in her heart. But come the 1990s, instead of Niyaz, she finds a Turkish family, Yunus, Dilek and their children.

Two Hearts As One is the story of people who sacrifice themselves to realize a dream. It is the story of people walking with the aim of giving new life, of people searching for the secret of eternity. It is a story of patience.

Ten years after being thrown out of her parental home, Nur hears that her mother is at death’s door. Taking her young daughter with her, Nur hurries back to her father’s world to see and reconcile with her mother before it is too late. While the universal theme of mother-daughter relationships lies at the center of the film, this is underpinned by an allusive subtext of incest, one of most common but least addressed social problems in Turkey. The individual stories of the family members combine with a sense of hope fuelled by tragedy to paint a portrait of the socially disconnected.

A small film crew arrives in Istanbul. They have been commissioned to make a film about the city for a minor TV channel. They start work immediately, filming interviews with the first people they meet, and then heading out onto the streets to film the many, very varied districts and denizens of Istanbul: an eccentric historian who believes that there was a civilization of cats before humanity, a Sufi dervish who has opened a café for lovers and crazies, an Armenian journalist, an Alevi communist, a religious zealot and a philosophical tea lady...

One day in the cutting room, spooling through the footage, the director notices that some shapes and figures are there which he hadn’t seen on the actual day of filming: his camera seems to have picked up the presence of ghosts. This idea fascinates the director and soon begins to obsess him. He films deliberately in the older, more solitary neighborhoods and at night in the hope of finding more ghosts.

Bahar lives with her family in a slum district of Istanbul and hopes to pass the entrance exams to study art. When the law comes after her father, Neşet, because of his political activities, they have to leave their home secretly in the middle of the night. They sneak into a luxurious villa, which their neighbour, Halil, has painted. According to Halil, the villa’s owners have gone abroad for the treatment of their sick child and won’t be back for a while. They decide to stay there until they find a new flat to rent.

Their first day at the villa coincides with the military takeover of 12 September 1980.

In the days that follow, Neşet divides his time between looking for a house to rent and continuing his political struggle. When he is shot during a military raid on the underground organization he belongs to, the family finds itself with bigger troubles.

Produced by Turkey’s biggest animation studio, Anima Istanbul, The Bad Cat is an animated epic for adults featuring the unforgettably bad cat, Shero, and his foul-mouthed gang. As animals on the street, Shero and friends are after the same as anyone else in their notoriously sleazy Istanbul neighborhood: debauchery with girls, food and the occasional drinking binge. But when their paths cross with humans, things get a little out of hand in hilarious, harsh and unexpected ways.

The film opens as Shero, Rıfkı the Seagull and Rıza the Rat are getting ready for a barbeque night. This ordinary looking day will prove otherwise as Shero inadvertently causes the death of a prospective lover, gets chased to death by his enemies, falls in love and finds out that he is father to a son, only to disown him. Little surprise that all these small mishaps upset the grand plans for the night.

The damaged old entrance door of an apartment building needs replacing. The residents committee meeting called to discuss and decide on the matter starts normally enough under the ambitious leadership of the committee chairwoman, Emel, aged 52, who has held the position for years. When everybody accepts her suggestions, it looks like the meeting will end without an incident. But at the last minute, a quiet resident dares to put forward an alternative suggestion. At this point, Emel suddenly turns into a real monster and starts attacking the quiet resident. The rebellious Zeynep (25) can’t bear to watch and leaps to the quiet resident’s defense. Young Murat (26), who fancies Zeynep, has to stand behind her. And the war begins! A relentless struggle for power reaches fantastic proportions, filling the days and nights with darkness, slander, conspiracy, accusations and incriminations. People are lost, secrets are revealed, lives are ruined. All for the sake of a simple entrance door.
Nesrin (30) and Hatun (42) are both cleaning women living in Istanbul. Life is an endless round of shuttling between their shanty town homes and the classy neighbourhoods of their employers. They live in the same apartment building and there is a hierarchy to their friendship: Hatun is like the older sister. While Nesrin struggles to survive with her young daughter in the big city and to understand why her husband left her, Hatun dreams in vain of buying a house in the districts where she goes to work.

Ahu Öztürk (Istanbul, 1976) studied philosophy and cinema. In 2004, she directed her first documentary, Chest. In 2010, she contributed her short, Open Wound, to the omnibus film, Tales from Kars. Open Wound was shown at many international film festivals including Rotterdam, Istanbul, Jerusalem, Sarajevo, and Beirut. Dust Cloth, her first feature film project, was selected to take part at the Istanbul Film Festival’s Meetings on the Bridge where it won the CNC award. Dust Cloth was also awarded the EAVE Scholarship at the CineLink Co-production Market and Turkish Ministry of Culture production support in 2012.

turkey 2015, 110’, colour

As seasonal forest workers, brothers Kemal and Cemal struggle with an uncertain future, living in a house on the outskirts of a village in the western Black Sea Region. One day, Nalân, a prostitute, arrives with Kemal and quickly adopts the house as her own. Although her presence calms Cemal, who is shaken by his mother’s death, it aggravates a growing rift between the brothers. Nalân is disappointed by Kemal’s increasingly erratic behaviour. Torn between leaving or staying, she opens herself up to Cemal’s compassionate world. In this inextricable situation, all three sink into their own despair. After Nalân’s departure, the brothers carry on living like two strangers in the same house. Overcome by feelings of passion, Cemal secretly sees Nalân. Afraid of losing his brother, Kemal follows him to the town’s brothel. There, as he confesses his fears of their possible separation, Nalân appears with a small case in her hand. Unable to bear Nalân’s return home to Cemal, Kemal succumbs to his jealousy and kills her.

Tunç Davut studied Cinema & Television in Eskişehir and Istanbul. He directed his first short film, Fork, in 1996. He worked as first assistant director on Yeşim Ustaoğlu’s feature, Journey to the Sun. His career in the film and media industry to date includes several TV films, TV series and commercials. One of his drama series, Hennaed Lambs, was awarded by the Turkish Association of Radio Television Journalists. Entanglement is his debut feature.
Ertugrul is based on two true stories that took place just under a century apart. In their dramatization, the film underlines the importance of friendship between the two nations of Turkey and Japan and of helping without expectation of return.

In 1890, the Ottoman Empire sent a naval ship, the Ertuğrul, to Japan, but on the way back to Istanbul the ship sank in a typhoon. Most of the crew died, but 69 sailors were rescued by Japanese fishermen.

Ninety-five years after this tragedy, during the Iran-Iraq War of 1980-88, 215 Japanese nationals were stuck in Tehran. On this occasion, Turkey’s national airline, Turkish Airlines, saved their lives in a successful evacuation operation.

Mitsutoshi Tanaka (Hokkaido, 1958) joined the advertising company Dentsu Eigasha (now Dentsu Tec) upon graduation from Osaka University of Arts, making TV commercials for TV Man Union before establishing Creators’ Union Co. in 1984. As a director of commercials, he has won awards from the Allied CM Council (ACC) and the National Association of Commercial Broadcasters in Japan.
The minute you walk through this door you have nothing... You are forced to leave your home and your country because of a war... What would you have done if it had been you?

After escaping from the war in Syria and arriving in Istanbul, a shy eight-year-old girl and her mother lose each other. As she searches for her mother, the little girl finds herself having to survive the challenges of the big city. Lena is a reminder of the unexpected, her predicament eliciting the question: What if a war breaks out tomorrow? The Guest is based on true story.

Andaç Haznedaroğlu (Ankara, 1970) graduated from the Acting Program of the Anatolu University State Conservatory in 1996. Over the course of 16 years, she directed many TV series in Turkey. In January 2014, she directed her first short film, My Son, for which she also wrote the script. She currently lectures on “Directing For Talent” at Istanbul Bilgi University.

Erkan, a man in his mid-30s, moves back to his family’s upper-middle-class house in Izmir after a year of misery caused by unemployment and a bitter divorce. He doesn’t appear to enjoy being with either his family or his old friends. So he starts spending time with Cihat, an eccentric loafer who claims to be Erkan’s pal from military service, even though Erkan cannot remember him. When a terrible smell from the Gulf of Izmir starts to spread through the city and repel its residents, Erkan discovers the possibilities of a brand new world with the help of Cihat and his friends.

Emre Yeksan obtained a BA and MA in Film Studies from Mimar Sinan University and Paris Sorbonne University respectively. He spent a while working as a freelance producer in Paris. Since then, he has produced films with directors such as Semih Kaplanoğlu, Kamen Kalev and Hüseyin Karabey. He also directed a short film titled Aziz. The Gulf, co-written with Ahmet Büke, will be his first feature as a director.
Hulki is a video art artist who has lived in Berlin for the last 12 years. He shares a house with his partner, Tine, and their baby daughter, but things between them are problematic. Hulki also has a nine-year-old son from a previous relationship who he sees regularly. He attempts to earn a living from the educational art projects he undertakes with school kids and aside from this spends most of his time aimlessly interviewing homeless people. Hulki’s life is a hotbed of contradictions, and as he lurches back and forth between stability and losing it, his long-time weaknesses for sex, drugs and alcohol come back to haunt him. One day, Demet shows up in Berlin. Years ago, she and Hulki had a brief, but intense relationship before she returned home to Turkey. Demet’s arrival reignites the romance between them, which in many respects remained unfulfilled first time around. Both are now advancing towards middle age, and although they succeed in getting back together, that also means facing up to the naked reality of life and their own psychological problems.

Ayhan Sarıgöl is a filmmaker and author of Kurdish descent. He has been living between Berlin and Istanbul since 1999, having studied philosophy, film direction and contemporary art in Berlin. He is also actively involved in theatre and contemporary art.

We forget everything. Except for our nightmares. Hasret has been having the same nightmare for some time, but she carries on with life unaware that the “dream” is actually a series of memories. A 30-year-old woman who edits documentaries for a TV channel living a solitary life in the flat left by her musician parents who died in a car crash 20 years ago...

Is it? A question creeps into her mind with the recurring nightmares: could it be that her parents didn’t die in a car crash after all? Doubt gnaws at her; she starts investigating. It is as if some things have been forgotten or that deliberate attempt has been made to make them forgotten. At work, Hasret is transferred to a different department. And that very same day she finds herself in a park she has never been to before. A job imposed on her, the past seeping from the park into the present, missing pieces of the nightmare everywhere... Hasret is scared. ‘Is it?’ is now the answered part of the question. To find the unanswered part she must search for herself in her memory.

Based on a true story and real characters, Mehmet Salih recounts the drama of the title character, a quiet, introverted and solitary kid. Mehmet Salih lives with his mother, a sick woman who eloped to get married. Although he wets his bed every night, he tries to stop his mother doing the laundry every day. At the same time, he develops feelings for the neighbor’s daughter, Ceylan. Like Mehmet Salih’s mother, Ceylan also elopes and appears to make a wrong choice.

The day his mother dies, Mehmet Salih doesn’t wet himself. But her death leaves him completely alone. Soon afterwards, Mehmet and Ceylan start living together and Ceylan gives birth to a son. The fatherless baby is like a mirror image of Mehmet Salih, who himself grew up without a father. Knowing that his father won’t come back, Mehmet Salih embarks on a new life with Ceylan and her baby.

Motherland is a subversive and uncompromising portrait of a woman torn apart by love and hatred for her mother, and struggling to reconcile the same cultural schisms that divide modern Turkey. Nesrin is an upper-middle class urban woman recovering from divorce. She had quit her office job, abandoned her house in Istanbul, and came to her parent’s old village in Anatolia to finish a novel and live out her childhood dream of being a writer. When her conservative and increasingly unhinged mother turns up uninvited and refuses to leave, Nesrin’s writing stalls and her fantasies of village life turn bitter as the two are forced to confront the darker corners of each other’s inner worlds.

One day, Zülküf Usta is puzzled to find himself in a well. He can’t understand why he is there. He isn’t, however, alone. Another puppet, like himself, approaches him in the well and explains: ‘I’ve been exiled here from the Wonderland Empire because I cut off the nose of a guy called Pinocchio. Why are you here?’ Zülküf Usta is lost for an answer; he just sits and thinks. And suddenly he remembers Yahya the benevolent. Noah refused at first to take mules onto the Ark because their father and mother were different. But Yahya turned to his grandfather and said, ‘Mules are beautiful animals. There’s room for them on board. Let’s take them, too.’ Noah listened to his grandson and agreed to take the mules. But what happened to them over time? This film seeks to find out.

Ahmet, a university lecturer in the philosophy of emotion, sees off his wife and daughter after they both decide to separate for a while. When news arrives the same night that both have been killed in a car accident, Ahmet is with his lover...

Quick-witted and intelligent, but free of self-importance, Ahmet cares about no one or anything and bows to no authority. Like everything else, he shrugs off the incident and carries on with the cherished bohemian life that suits him so well. Aside from a few brief affairs with women, Ahmet is alone and his life quiet and uneventful. But a series of strange things start happening for no apparent reason whatsoever. Ahmet begins to dither even over minor things and to show uncharacteristic weakness with people he usually discounts altogether. Not only that, a bizarre relationship develops between Ahmet, the caretaker lady who comes to clean, and her children - and this bearing in mind that, before she died, Ahmet’s wife had asked him to help the woman.

Gökhan dropped out of Istanbul University as a second-year Economics student because of his passion as a painter. His greatest dream is to show the paintings he has been painting for years at a gallery. While his former classmates from university are earning a small fortune and mapping out their career paths, Gökhan paints non-commercial paintings and trades art to scrape a living. He also worries about having to do long-term military service having failed to get a university degree. His decision to become a painter has won him no support from either his father or many of his friends. And only his mother tries to help him out financially when he needs it most. Gökhan finds himself conflicted in his struggle to make his dreams reality: on the one hand he is plagued by anxieties over the future, but on the other he is driven by personal ideals and the desire to prove himself. In facing this dilemma, his greatest support comes from Giyas...

Adem is wheeled away on a stretcher, semi-conscious and ranting, ‘Soda pop!’ We cut from the hospital corridors and flashback years earlier to Adem’s school. Adem has just finished primary school. The summer is long. Adem’s father wants him to work in the tobacco fields, but Adem is stubborn and persuades his father to let him be a soda seller’s apprentice... It is Ramadan, the traditional month of fasting. Since his “lovely” friend Berna is also fasting, Adem decides that he, too, will fast despite his young age; when his family opposes he continues secretly nonetheless. But fasting in the Aegean heat is far from easy and he also discovers that breaking the fast ahead of time means 61 days of penance. At the end of a tiring and difficult day, Adem breaks his fast with just minutes to go. As he walks desolately along the street, a car pulls up. The strangers inside claim to be friends of his much loved ‘big brother’, Hasan, and ask Adem to take them to him. While thinking he is the bearer of good news, Adem unwittingly brings about Hasan’s death. As everything begins to blur, we return to the hospital room at the beginning of the story. Adem is in the prison infirmary soon after the 1980 military takeover, on the 61st day of a hunger strike.
Scenarist

Adem is a 40-something author who writes mainly about politics. Although all his books so far have proven popular, the latest is blocked from publication. As he struggles to overcome the obstacles, Adem runs into an organization that plays an active role in governing communities.

To circumvent the expectations that the organization has of Adem, another group calling themselves “the Moral” steps in to help. But for the plan to work, Adem must track down a man known as “the Scenarist”. Caught in the middle, Adem becomes a reluctant part of the two groups’ plans. To escape them both, he must devise an even smarter plan of his own.

H. Orkun Eser (Konya, 1989) studied at Selçuk University. He began working in production in 2008 and went on to found the production company, MetrajFilm. Meet Neslihan! A perfect cook, an expert on Turkish cuisine, home-loving, fiercely loyal to her husband, an impeccable housewife... and a serial killer. Her husband is a bank manager and they live in a eerily quiet small city. A timid, lovable woman, Neslihan spends her days doing housework, worrying only about what to cook for dinner that night. She imagines herself to be a celebrity chef on a TV program titled “Kitchen Secrets”, giving the audience dreamy Turkish recipes. Every recipe is linked to a particular person in her life: her husband, his mistress, his best friends... She killed them all one by one in a series of murders that each relates to a recipe. This is a black comedy, just like life itself. Neslihan’s Kitchen is also a serious attempt to look closely at the lives of the oppressed domestic slaves we all know so well: silenced housewives.

Salih is a night watchman in a town cemetery. He shows up at the guard’s shack every afternoon and returns in the morning before sunrise. Despite his advanced age, he travels back and forth on the same road in the same routine every day. Because of his job, he has turned in on himself and been detached from real life for years. The things that happen on the road, the strange men who came to the shack at the dead of night, the young girl in Salih’s recurring dreams… Collectively they have made him deeply paranoid. The real and unreal are confused; until the first light of the morning ...

A baroque tale that combines the subtle humor of Anton Chekhov and fantastic characters of Giovanni Papini.

The whole world watched as mass carnage took place in Bosnia Herzegovina between 1992-1995. One hundred thousand people were slaughtered and more than two million displaced. This heart-wrenching tragedy began in the village of Bratunac.

Hanife Bacı’s daughter and her fiancé, Haris, are celebrating their engagement in Bratunac. Although they invite all Turks, Croats and Serbs in the village to the ceremony, only Turks and a few Croats turn up on the day; the rest of the village deliberately stays away. While still underway, the celebration is stormed by Serb militia forces when they invade Bratunac. The militiamen savagely kill all the Turks, leaving only Haris alive, but severely wounded. Women of childbearing age are sent to camps to be raped and tortured; Hanife Bacı is among them.

Ferman, a young guy in television, and Nicole, a sexy French producer, go to the ancient town of Mardin to make a documentary about a legend involving treasure and a local Kurdish tribe. They stay in town as guests of the tribal chief. Soon after they begin shooting, Ferman tosses out the idea that the secret of the treasure lies hidden in a song.

The chief keeps his elderly and supposedly crazy father away from people. But when the old man meets Nicole, he explains excitedly that the treasure belongs to the French and has been hidden somewhere to be returned. Only he doesn’t remember where. Determined to hunt down the treasure, the debt-ridden chief asks his beautiful daughter, Melike, to keep the documentary crew occupied as they search for songs. In the meantime, the chief will restore relations with his father and help jog his memory over the treasure. However, Melike has her own agenda and plans to run away with Ferman as soon as they find the gold.

All the while, the suspicious chief of a rival tribe is looking on with less than friendly intent...
24 January, 1993. Turkey’s most influential journalist, Ugur Mumcu, is killed when a bomb planted in his car explodes. The murder is one of the most significant, bitter incidents in Turkey’s political history.

Uğur’s wife Güldal, a homemaker who has devoted herself to her family, doesn’t even have time to grieve. In the midst of this catastrophe, she is forced to stand tall, “as befits Uğur”, raise her two children and track down her husband’s assassins, while also battling against state forces, who are intent on covering up the murder. Her life is irreversibly changed, but never once does she give up on the quest to find her husband’s killers.

Years later, she is now the deputy head of parliament and vice president of the foundation established in her husband’s memory. The case remains unsolved.

Nisa (35) is trapped under debris after an earthquake. She clings to life by gazing at the sky through a tiny hole above her head and tries unsuccessfully to claw her way out. Nisa's attempts to get help on her phone and the internet also fail. Using the camera on her phone, she makes a video involving a confession about her daughter in the hope of finding redemption.

Nisa's demise is intercut with a parallel storyline, in which we see Barış (37) immersing himself in nature. He learns how to fish, exercises, jogs in the forest and makes videos of how he is spending his time for his doctor. Although Nisa thinks her husband, Barış, is dead, Barış has in fact survived the disaster and is going for therapy. After spending days in the forest by himself, he manages to watch the video that Nisa recorded, even if it tears his heart out.

International Filmmor Women’s Film Festival on Wheels
13-26 April 2015, Istanbul, Adana, Diyarbakır, İzmir, Nevşehir, Bodrum

Filmmor Women’s Film Festival is held every year in Istanbul and goes on to tour different cities at the invitation and with the support of other women’s organizations. Festival screenings are categorized into sections carrying themes like ‘Women’s Cinema’, ‘Sex-ual-ity’, ‘A Purse of Her Own’, ‘Our Body is Ours’. The programme also focuses on the place of women’s cinema and includes collective presentations, Q&A sessions, panel discussions and workshops. Intentionally, there is no competition section, a decision based on the argument that women don’t need to compete with each other, whereas they do need to stick together.

Filmekimi
3 October-1 November 2015 - Istanbul

First organized in 2002, the Filmekimi was conceived as a compact, one-week film festival that takes place in October, heralding the new, upcoming cinema season in Turkey. From 2006 to 2008, Filmekimi conducted a film competition for digitally-shot short films. The Filmekimi programme typically includes around 40 films shown at recent international film festivals. A total audience of 57,000 was attained in 2014 in Istanbul only. In 2015, Filmekimi will, once more, extend beyond Istanbul, and travel to present a selection of 15 films at eight cinematically underprivileged cities, including workshops for “audience professionals” in collaboration with the Creative Europe member countries.
